EXTRACTS.

PAIPE A PHENDRE
 "Made to be painted" — A Millie might give A fortune to study that exquisite face.
 The face is a fortune, a Laurence might live And in each line of that figure a still grace.
 The pose is perfection, a model such first,
 From the delicate face to the slender hand, But the almost blue eyes with their smiling look dim And lips to be loved would a trifle more red.
 She was not a Payne, but a girl in a pose — A Payne would not have been so lovely —
 A Payne would not have been so lovely — We sigh as the millie glances to the rose, But the poet has done to give signs back again.
 With a look, the rose — then a flower would fall Of grace, and beauty to gather who live, It is a look not a Payne's — She's a girl, that millie, She's a girl, that millie, that millie, that millie, — Spoken by a girl, by R. C. Penell.

TACTICITUDINITY.

It is rather curious that while all countries and ages have agreed to pronounce the faculty of speech man's distinguishing characteristic in comparison with the brute, the proverbial philosophy of all countries and all ages has been equally unanimous in pronouncing speech to be silent and silence golden. Not a proverb, so far as we are aware, has ever been extolled in praise of loquacity, while proverb in favour of tacituinity may be culled from all languages and all literatures. From the days of Homer, who makes his own countrymen move on to battle in impressive silence, and compares the clamor of the Trojans to the cackling of cranes, down to the time when General Grant came like another "Spectator" amongst us, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer makes a speech ascribing the loss of many a useful piece of legislation to the loquacity of Parliament, the world has been growing apparently more and more convinced of the value of silence and more and more given to chatter.

THE WORK OF SATURN IN ## SOUTHERN INDIA.

A correspondent writes to the Pail Mail that the Hindu Saturn, or Sani, is an essential part of the Hindu faith. The sacred writings abound with instances of his implacable hatred to mankind. We have various sources of information as to the character ascribed to this deity, the accounts drawn from which, though not differing much in detail, seem to denote a common origin. In Greek mythology, Saturn is the son of Heven and Earth, a deposed ruler of the gods.
 According to the view of Ptolemy and the astrological writers, he is the "supremacy" or highest of the planets, placed beyond Jupiter and Mars, the "tripler." When joined by an evil aspect to the ascendant, he causes sickness, family affliction, accidents, falls, and bruises. The mind becomes dull and heavy under his influence; the body suffers lingering diseases, coughs, colds, pleuritic complaints, and low fevers.
 When this planet is in various, covetous, calumnious, and misanthropic, voracious, dissembling, envious, suspicious, stubborn, a conqueror of women, a liar, malicious, murdering, never contented, and ever repining.
 This cheerful character is not inconsistent with the mythological accounts of either branch of the Aryan race. The use amongst ourselves of the adjective "saturnine" indicates gloomy disposition. The Greek Saturn mutilated his father and devoured his children. But the Hindu Saturn delights in acts of wanton cruelty and mischief, pursues his victim with the ferocity and relentlessness of a bloodhound, and seldom quits his prey until the utmost wretchedness has been attained. It is very remarkable, however, that the power of Sani is not supposed to extend to the deprivation of life. In this there is a remarkable resemblance to the Satan of the Book of Job. Sani oppresses his victims for a longer or shorter period, but never longer than seven years and a half, which is the maximum period of the duration of his power.

THE OCEAN AT REST.

A son of "Voltaire" once said a broad domain Fair, happy islands rest upon its rolling plain.
 The waterfalls from the shifting rocks they run, And fragrance, and peace, and sunny breathe to earth and air.
 Little does, which fall slowly here, on earth's expanse, But bright and glowing all, within some former life, Like fair and soft and sweet, a vision rather dim, From those old golden days, when yet the earth was young.
 With nature's soft the waters flow the flowery strand And flow motions through the shells, and shrill and shrill.
 In rest, as on the face the spring breeze lightly stirs,
 The sea is like a child, and like a child it plays.
 Its blue eye looks a forth from the gently ending waves,
 And smiles as white and blue from ending waves,
 And smiles as blue and white from ending waves, Around its head on soft, dark wings in flight they stir.

THE ENGLISH IN CORFU.

The Deutsche Rundschau for September contains an interesting account of Corfu, written by Herr Haackel, who has been recently visiting the island. Herr Haackel makes some observations upon English rule in the island during the past few years, and states that the English have been very successful in improving the condition of the island. But the rapid increase of the material prosperity of the islanders and the striking manner in which many of their wants were supplied were potent arguments for overcoming the growing antipathy of the Ionians. And when in 1864 the English Government voluntarily gave up its protectorate of the island, the Greeks, although the Corfuots ostentatiously rejoiced over their liberation from the hated foreign yoke, their rejoicing was of very short duration, and many of them very speedily arrived at a perception of the fact that their island had lost more than it had gained. In fact, for all that it has to show of modern civilization and European comfort, by which it is so greatly distinguished from all the other Ionian Islands, Corfu has to thank its fifty years' subjection to British rule. By the energy and care with which the English rule everywhere exercises its peculiar colonizing talent, it has also achieved great results in a very short time.
 The government and administration of the island were completely reorganized, schools and other educational institutions were established, and agriculture and the production of wine and oil were improved.
 In the town new, handsome, and habitable houses were built. The Episnades, a space of four acres between the town and the citadel, was levelled and converted into an attractive square, surrounded and traversed by walks shaded with trees, and here and there ornamented with shrubs and flower-beds. Now it forms the largest and most pleasant open space of the town; it is at all times frequented by groups of strollers or loungers, and in fine weather it is the common place of public amusement. The place of the fashionable world of Corfu. At the northern part of the Episnades Sir Thomas Maitland, the first governor, built himself a stately palace, which is now the royal residence. In the beautiful gardens which surround the palace stands a bronze statue of the same governor, clothed in the dress of an old Roman, and while on the southern side of the Episnades there also stands a small round temple in his honor. In commemoration of his successor, Sir Howard Douglas, an obelisk has been set up. Among other memorials of enduring value bestowed upon Corfu by the English, is a small, but a remarkable aqueduct, which is almost a geographical feature, long and bridge to the town a copious stream of spring water from the mountains between Benize and Castelli. The town had previously been in great need of good drinking water. But the excellent roads which the English laid over all parts of the mountainous island, and which lead easily to the most beautiful spots, deserve great praise. The British Government naturally particular care upon the construction of fortresses and by profiting skilfully by the old Venetian structures, the town itself, and especially the citadel, were fortified to their most limit of strength. New forts and outworks rose up around the town. The little island of Vassio, between the town and the journey to the north, was converted into a strong fort, and all its bastions plentifully armed with powerful artillery. Thus Corfu lay, like a small Gibraltar, at the door of the Adriatic, and commanded the entrance to that important arm of the Mediterranean.
 In the year 1864 the British Government declared that it gave up the protectorate of the Ionian Islands, and made it clear to the kingdom of Greece. The awe-inspiring fortifications, the construction of which had cost enormous sums of money, were blown into the air, and the materials brought from England, were carried away, and soon there was but little left of the numerous creations of the English.
 With the garrison went back most of the English families who had established themselves in the island, and who brought each year a large sum of money into it. Most of the improvements which they had introduced disappeared one by one, thanks to the unaccountable "laziness" with which these careless southerners live on from day to day and care from them all thought for the future, according to the characteristic rule of life in the East. "What you can do to-morrow, never do to-day." Then one excellent regulation laid through after another. The present condition of the fine mountain roads, in which from the want of necessary repairs large holes and chasms have been made, is a clear proof of the rule. The more intelligent part of the inhabitants of the island, however, are still often depicted, and the period of British protection seems to them already as the golden age of the island. Whenever a complaint is raised over an unsatisfactory or unimproving condition of the island, "Yes," it was otherwise in the time of the English. An old peasant once assured Herr Haackel, in all seriousness, that since the departure of the English the climate of Corfu had become materially worse, and that in their day the olive harvest was altogether more plentiful than it is now.

A YOUNG IRISHMAN IN ENGLAND

SIXTY YEARS AGO.

The first object that attracted my attention, as I approached the town, was the number of its windmills. They are such conspicuous objects, and so many in number, that they are almost everywhere to be seen.
 To give you a just idea of the number of Liverpool, I would bid you take a large portion of the city of Dublin — not the finest neither should it be the worst; change then, the good old Irish name which we see over the doors — O'Moore, and O'Meara, and O'Connell, and put in their place Swales, Sharkey, and Smith, and in addition to these served silent men, there are many names who are frequently seen in England, then all the streets with fat, selfish-looking Protestants, damning their eyes and limbs, and involving God to do so. Then add a few more Irish, fifty or sixty windmills (for I am sure there are not less in Liverpool), and a great number of very extensive dockyards for shipping, four good Catholic churches, one synagogue of Jews, several Protestant churches, and other places of devotion, and female exhibitions; then let the place assume the English tone, and you will have a Liverpool in Dublin, without going farther. All these things, I hope, shall never take place, but by supposing them to have occurred, you will have a pretty correct notion of what is to be seen in Liverpool. We travelled from Liverpool to London, which is 204 miles, without stopping, unless to change horses, and the little time spent in taking breakfast, dinner, and supper. We started at seven in the morning, and before we had reached our destination we had travelled about 90 miles, and still continued our journey; the weather was excessively hot, and we were completely parched with the sun. England has not experienced, within these forty years so warm weather as at present. I never felt anything like it before. As I journeyed on I viewed the country on each side as far as my eye could reach with the utmost attention, until I grew tired of beholding one continued scene of rich and fertile lands, in the highest state of improvement. It would not surprise me to see five or ten miles of an improved country; but to see 200 miles of a country every mile of which disclosing new scenes of richness and fertility is more than I can ever feel in my mind to meet in England.
 — Letter of the Rev. James Mackay, D.D.

CURIOUS FACTS ABOUT THE ## GROWTH OF CHILDREN.

Professor Buxton, of the Harvard Medical School, having examined the measurements of some 25,000 children in the public schools of Boston, has presented the results in a series of tables, which have been published by the State Board of Health. He makes the following statement: — "The growth of children takes place in such a way that until the age of eleven or twelve years, the child is both taller and heavier than the adult of the same age, but at this period of life the child begins to grow very rapidly, and for the next two or three years surpasses boys of the same age in both height and weight.
 Boys then acquire and retain a size superior to that of girls, who have now nearly completed their growth. Children of American parents are taller and heavier than those of European parents, a superiority which seems to depend partly on the greater average comfort in which such children live and grow up, and partly upon differences of race or stock.
 Pupils of American parents at the public schools of London and other higher schools are apparently for the same reasons superior in height and weight to the generality of boys of American parentage in the public schools, and of English boys of the nonlabouring classes attending public schools and universities, the superiority in weight being as a rule more marked than that in height."
